

Resorb Networks, Inc Announces that nOOKist ®, the Popular Sexual History Tracking Service, is now Available on Mobile Phones

nOOKist® (<http://www.nookist.com>), the internet's first sexual history tracking service, today announced the debut of its free application for a variety of mobile phones, effectively allowing users to easily access their sexual health information.

New York, NY (PRWEB) September 2, 2010 -- nOOKist® (<http://www.nookist.com>), the internet's first sexual history tracking service, today announced the debut of its free application for a variety of mobile phones, effectively allowing users to easily access their sexual health information.

“We have had a lot of requests from our members to develop a scaled down, mobile application based on the nOOKist platform. We have always said that we rely on the feedback, ideas and suggestions of our members to help form and evolve the service into what people are looking for. To all of our members, we have heard you loud and clear,” said Robert Ianuale, President and CEO of Resorb Networks, Inc; the company behind the popular sexual health service.

The new nOOKist mobile web site is optimized for the mobile user experience; and is available for a variety of web-enabled mobile phones using the latest mobile browser technology. nOOKist's new mobile site also uses the same technology, look and feel that users would encounter using their personal computer.

The scaled down mobile version allows nOOKist members to easily access their sexual health, get help on a particular sexual health topic by browsing the forums, record new entries and sessions, manage their account, as well as access the unique tool called VDNNote® (<http://www.nookist.com/vdnote.aspx>), which has the ability to calculate the probability of obtaining several sexually-transmitted diseases, based on the prior sexual history of the user which helps simplify the task of modifying sexual habits by actually computing the risks involved with having unprotected intercourse and other related attributes.
